CATALYZING LGBTQ HEALTH RESEARCH

The PRIDE Study, by the numbers

As you know, inclusivity is critical in medical research. We believe that everyone deserves recognition and should be counted to improve health outcomes for the LGBTQ community.

But what does that look like, exactly? (It's one of the questions we're most frequently asked when people join.) Let us show you! Here's a quick look at the universe of The PRIDE Study participants, in three views.

PS – We're hiring! The PRIDE Study seeks a research professional to join our high-energy, committed team dedicated to LGBTQ health. You are expert at executing research projects with attention to detail. People of color, gender minorities encouraged to apply. Apply at the Stanford Careers website: <https://careersearch.stanford.edu/> (Job #81616).

We're moving! (Please pardon our virtual dust.)

We're excited to announce that our projects (PRIDEnet, The PRIDE Study, and our work on behalf of the All of Us Research Program) will be housed under a new roof come February 1: Stanford University!

What does this mean for you? There should actually be very little impact on our participants and followers. Our website and participant portal are still at the same address on the internet. We still use four levels of security to protect health information. We still control all of the data shared with us.

We anticipate only two small inconveniences: Our website and participant portal will be down for approximately 10 business days during the transition to Stanford. During that time, our web address (<https://pridestudy.org>) will show that it is Temporarily Under Construction. In addition, current participants will be asked to consent again as research participants for Stanford University. Thanks for your understanding!

We love technology.

Have you set any healthy living goals for yourself in 2019? Do tell! Sharing your health and lifestyle information can help change the future of health for All of Us. And now, connecting to the All of Us Research Program just got easier. Use your smartphone and the All of Us mobile app to participate in the program whenever you want... and wherever you may roam.

Download the app from Apple App or Google Play store today.
